THE OLD SNAG
Dick Cripe

“I think it’s time to take out that old snag”, I stated firmly. “It’s leaning and likely to fall one of these days and the birds no longer pay any attention to it”.

“What do you mean-the birds no longer pay any attention to it-they’re on it all of the time”, replied Antje.

“Yea, they perch there as they come and go, but there are no bugs in it and they no longer nest there, it’s too rotten. It’s dead, dead, dead.

The snag under discussion is about 30 feet of the bottom half of a sizable ponderosa pine that broke off many years ago. All of the bark is peeled off and it is full of holes of various sizes. The woodpeckers and nuthatches have been busy on it over the years. When we bought the house eight years ago it was an old snag. Although it is against our back fence our yard is shallow and the snag looms over our back deck. Birds have nested there from time to time since we bought the place. The last time was two summers ago when a pair of flickers raised a nest of three. We watched them develop from unseen cheeps, to hungry demanding mouths, to frightened fledglings. Our sister-in-law actually saw the third and final flicker chick take its maiden leap from the safety of the nest out into space-an exciting moment. Last year, however, the snag was vacant and unused all summer.

“I think you should leave it there” said Ken Roberge of Specialty Tree Service and an Audubon member. “It doesn’t look like it’s going to fall down anytime soon and it adds a lot of character to your yard”. So, I was out-voted. The snag was spared for another year.

“I think somebody’s pecking in the snag. Maybe they are making a nest!”, exclaimed Antje, sometime later.

Sure enough, a pair of pygmy nuthatches could be seen working on one of the existing small holes chipping it out to meet their specifications. We heard their tap-tap-tap regularly over the course of a week. We thought a couple of times that they had abandoned it, but they soon returned and resumed their work. Now they are clearly nesting. We can see one nuthatch looking out the hole while the other adult comes back and forth bringing something to eat. We don’t know if one is nesting and the other is collecting food, or if they are taking turns. But, they are well into their parenting adventure now.

There was a flurry of noise and activity around the snag a few days ago. I looked out and watched a flicker checking out a larger hole just below the nuthatches who were taking exception to his presence and raising a ruckus. Shortly the flicker flew off presumably to find another nest site and everything quieted down again. I was surprised, then, yesterday, while watching the nuthatches, to see the head of a flicker peering out of the other hole. The flicker couple have, indeed, taken up residence. Now we have flickers and nuthatches both nesting in the snag a couple of feet from each other-a multi-cultural community. We believe in diversity!.

Over the next month we will watch these two families with interest and see how much of the chicks’ activity we will be able to observe. This should keep us busy. And the snag will stay until it falls down.

EDUCATIONAL PRESENTATIONS

Kris Buchler

Our Audubon chapter gave two programs in the community in April. "Backyard Birding" was presented to 35 members of the Coeur d’Alene Garden Club on April 13. These gardeners were especially interested in creating gardens that would attract birds and the proper way to feed and provide water and plants preferred by desired species. We discussed responsible feeding techniques, types of food and feeders, plants that attract birds and healthy gardening for wildlife. Many handouts were supplied on these topics. Unlimited supply of feeders for display. A slide presentation introduced local birds.

MAY AND SUMMER FIELD TRIPS

ATTENTION BIRDERS!!!! CENTURY COUNT

The Century Count (trying for 100 species in one day), has been scheduled for Tuesday, May 31. We are doing Bonner County this year and will begin at Schweitzer Mountain about 4:30 AM. In order to begin right away, we have looked into renting a condo or room/rooms in the lodge for Monday night, May 30. The type of accommodations depends on how many will join us. Also, we can go up in time for dinner at the Grill or stop in Sandpoint. Everyone will have to bring their food for the day of the count.

Please contact Kris Buchler as soon as possible if you are interested in participating in the Century Count and will start with us on the mountain. There is an alternative for those who want to drive early in the morning and meet us about 6:30 AM in Sandpoint. Also, if anyone wants to do a half day, I’d like to know that also.

Please join us for this annual event!!!!!! We have wonderful memories from past counts and this is our first Bonner County Century Count. Newcomers are encouraged and welcome. Kris Buchler Call 664-4739 or email at eagleroost@adelphia.net, for more information or to register for the count.
